

GENRE

A French word
(pronounced “ZHAHN-ruh”)
meaning “type” or “kind.”

Consider some basic movie genres:

- Western
- Mystery
- Romance
- Thriller
- Comedy
- Documentary
- Horror
- Children's

Genres have archetypal elements

- These elements remain the same throughout most movies in a given genre.
- Audiences expect to see the archetypal elements, and are disappointed if those elements are not present.
- Filmmakers alter the archetypal elements slightly to make their films original, surprising, and satisfying.

Before you sit down in the theatre (or rent the DVD), the filmmakers have already provided you with visual clues about the genres you can expect to see.

Artwork on film posters, video boxes and dvd inserts, trailers (advertising previews), and print ads tells us what genres we should expect to see.

Let's brainstorm about what archetypal elements we expect to see in some different genres.

Archetypal elements of children's or family movie ?

- Animal characters, often with human voices and qualities
- Acceptance of supernatural, fantasy
- Embattled child struggling against evil or misunderstanding; facing obstacles
- Magical forces may intervene
- Good (the child) triumphs over evil (the adult world)
- Animation and cartoons may be used

Mixing archetypes can confuse, disorient, enrage the audience.

- No sexually explicit scenes in children's films!
- No long conversations about romantic feelings in westerns!
- No gory mutilation and violence in romances!
- No murdered cute small animals and children in comedies!
- No fairy godmothers in documentaries!

"The film pulls you in like a magnetic force."
